I love Little Rock because it is a small yet big city. You don't realize how spread it is until you have to travel across the city.

I see more arts and culture, active transportation, affordable housing, and other activities in its potential. We can be part of this new South. One where people are civically engaged with an innovative city government. One that seeks to highlight its Black history and culture. One that bridges the divides that have existed for decades if we choose.

I bring a lived experience that is unique as an LR native who left and came back. My professional experience in nonprofits, city government, and education shaped my views. My values guide my work around justice and equity.

I hope to gain new connections, perspectives, and knowledge by participating with Our Little Rock.
